Why choose Bachelor of Social Science

UQ's Bachelor of Social Science degree is unique in its approach and delivery, with a strong grounding in social justice, policy research, and strong links to industry. It provides a foundation of knowledge about key social issues and problems, while also fostering practice-based skill development for immediate entry into the workforce, including skills in public policy design and evaluation, social impact assessment, social planning and research.

The Bachelor of Social Science provides a diversity of skills that will enable you to work in areas that address pressing social issues at local, national and international levels. Amongst these are rising poverty and inequality, the gender pay gap, homelessness, unemployment, Indigenous peoples and injustice, health and illness, refugees and the social impacts of climate change. Graduates develop skills, values and knowledge that are sought after by employers in the public and private sector, as well as non-government organisations, including the ability to communicate effectively across diverse audiences, theoretically informed cross-cultural awareness, social research skills, and a strong ethical compass. Course work provides in-depth knowledge and skills related to social issues, the ability to identify and analyse social issues and problems, and to develop solutions based in policy and practice.
